

The Market

As I was standing in the everlasting line to get into the building full of secret passageways and Rube Gullberg related gizmos, I pondered to myself on what I would find inside. The building that felt like it was agathokakological was called the Omega Mart, and it was located in Area 15 in Las Vegas. Then before I could continue thinking why I was dragged out of my hotel room to go to this glorified market. So I walked in and it instantly clicked in my brain once I saw a familiar looking freezer.

I saw the blue freezer then I recalled when I saw a video of the same freezer and behind it was a weird looking room with an old phone on a desk. So when I could not remember any more from my memory I decided to go into the freezer. While my memory is a little fuzzy I recall a desk with a phone on it, and then 2 other doors. I went behind one of the doors and saw a giant room that was illuminated by different colors of lights. Also there were ice holes, cabins, and more rooms. After I had seen the first part of the mart I went to my right and there was a room that had a really big structure that people were standing on. It looked like one of the play areas in old fast food restaurants. I then found the stairs to go onto the structure. There were a bunch of places you could crawl through and a bunch of phones scattered around the entire building.

When I came down, I was walking to go to the places I have not visited and found a hole in the wall. So like anyone would I crawled through it and found myself back into the market. When I was walking through it, I found another entrance to get into the non market area. I found my way back and looked at the area I did not go to, and there was nothing interesting so then I met up with my family and left the Omega Mart with new memories to add to my collection.

Ethan Negroe